State Assists 11 New Mexico Businesses in Training 232 Employees

SANTA FE, N.M. – The New Mexico Economic Development’s Job Training Incentive Program (JTIP) Board has approved grants to train 232 New Mexico workers (230 trainees and 2 interns), helping to grow and up-train the New Mexico workforce, Economic Development Department (EDD) Cabinet Secretary Alicia J. Keyes announced today.

JTIP is an important catalyst for the economy, attracting new companies to New Mexico and helping to retrain and advance workers already here so they can earn higher wages.

"JTIP is a powerful tool in building our economy," Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham said. "These jobs in emerging industries are a testament to our ability to diversify the state's workforce and will help us as we accelerate toward a 21st century economy."

"As businesses look to expand or rehire after the pandemic, JTIP is providing extra momentum," Secretary Keyes said. "Our goal is not only to grow New Mexico jobs, but to create well-paying jobs in a diverse and innovative range of industries."
