This Week's Highlight: Regional Farm to Food Bank Program

NEW MEXICO GROWN

Using USDA funds, the New Mexico Association of Food Banks purchases locally and regionally produced foods to nourish New Mexicans in need. By offering fair prices to farmers, ranchers, and other food producers, the Regional Farm to Food Bank \(RFFB\) program strengthens local food systems while ensuring that New Mexicans who experience food insecurity gain critical access to healthy, fresh local foods.

Participation is free and no producer is too small!
Farmers, ranchers and other food producers are all welcome!

To sell to food banks, producers must be part of the New Mexico Grown Approved Supplier Program (ASP). The ASP helps New Mexico producers sell to food banks by assuring that their products are safe, traceable, and originate from farms or gardens using sound food safety and quality assurance practices.
