The New Mexico Film Office Announces Feature Film “Killing Faith” Begins Production in New Mexico

Santa Fe, NM - New Mexico Film Office Director Amber Dodson announced today that the feature film, “Killing Faith,” will begin filming in and around Santa Fe beginning January 2024.

“Killing Faith” is written and directed by Ned Crowley and features the acting talents of Guy Pierce (“LA Confidential”), Dewanda Wise (“The Harder They Fall”), and Tim Roth (“Once Upon a Time in Hollywood”). The New Mexico-based production company Triple Seven Pictures, a previously New York-based company that has relocated to New Mexico, is providing locations and production services for this project. Zori Davidkova and Wes Hager will be the producers for Choice Films while on location in Santa Fe.

“Killing Faith” takes place in the summer of 1859. A widowed physician reluctantly agrees to take a recently freed slave and her mysterious Caucasian daughter on a 5-day journey through the West to find a Faith Healer in a distant town. The woman believes her daughter is possessed. The doctor believes she carries The Sickness. Either way, the fact remains that every living thing the girl touches mysteriously dies.

The production will employ over 100 New Mexicans – approximately 45 as background talent, 60 resident crew members, and 5 principal actors.
